

Christina Jayne (CJ) Kalinka, MA, Ed.M, Graduate Research Assistant

Christina Jayne (CJ) Kalinka is a doctoral student in Clinical Health Psychology at the University of Colorado Denver, with research and clinical experience in the promotion of health, prevention programs, and human service work, and teaching experience in statistics and psychology. She has been involved in many research projects, such as investigating individual perceptions of sexually transmitted disease contraction, evaluating and implementing internet-based couples skills workshops, creating culturally-sensitive preventative violence programs for the New York State Education System, and co-authoring a book for the Lumina Foundation outlining strategic planning steps for programs and schools looking to create pre-college access programs. Her non-profit background includes working with the homeless and individuals with mental health needs, collaboration with community-based organizations, and advocating for client rights and policy changes. She has a BA in psychology from the University of Michigan-Ann Arbor with a minor in women's studies. Her Master of Arts in Psychological Counseling and a Master of Education in Counseling are from Columbia University in New York City.
